The Salt Carrier's Promise

Every morning Meera carried salt from the shore to the hill market. One day a tired old potter named Gopal asked her to carry his jars as well. She agreed, and at the market she refused to sell his jars. The next morning Gopal paid her twice and gave her a small blue jar.